MEMORANDUM FOR: Executive Officer, DD/M&S

SUBJECT : M&S Advisory Group Recommendation for Eliminating Excessive Distribution of Computer Reports

1. The following is intended as additional clarification of OJCS views on the subject which was discussed in our telephone conversation of 22 April 1974.

2. First of all, OJCS is heartily in favor of action to reduce unnecessary reports. Obviously, this is a "motherhood" objective which we would not want to be aligned against; but, more importantly, we reduce our workload when unnecessary reports are eliminated. You may recall there was a DD/M&S objective which suggested a partial review each year of the reports prepared by each Office. We suggested a full review of all reports each year. It should be noted that this is not a new idea. In the short OJCS history there have been several attempts to eliminate unnecessary reports. What usually happens is a drive is put on to get each Office to review its computer reports, some unneeded reports are discovered, eliminated, and then the "weeds start to grow back in the garden."

3. We object to the suggestion in paragraph 3.b. of the M&S Advisory Group's recommendation. Some reasons:

a. We have no simple way of preparing a semi annual listing of reports. Just ponder a minute on the thousands of reports that are produced only once; those that are produced directly by the programmers or analysts in the user office without OJCS intervention.

b. This list would not be helpful as a review mechanism. Visualize this semi annual listing (if it were produced). The titles would often be ambiguous or would not give a clear picture of what the report looks like. The user or recipient would want to see the report or a sample of it before saying that he no longer wants it.

c. Reports are produced because someone wants information or because someone wants to pass information to someone else for action. An example of the first situation is an intelligence analyst processing his data base for information. OJCS is only the service facility for producing the report. The analyst determines that he needs it and we produce it. The judgment--necessary or unnecessary report--is made by the analyst. An example of the second situation can be found in many of the Office of Personnel and Office of Finance computer reports that are distributed throughout the Agency. OP and OF issue these reports because someone has asked for these reports or because OP and OF feel that certain kinds of information should be distributed periodically to all organizations. In either case, it is an issue between the originator (OP and OF) and the recipient; not OJCS, which is merely the agent for preparation of the report.

d. The "semi annual listing of computer reports" could easily become another one of those reports that no one wants. If we interpret the words "user office" in the suggestion as the office that is responsible for originating the report, I don't think it is asking too much to expect the originator to be knowledgeable of the reports that he has OJCS preparing for him.

e. It is quite possible that some originators of reports may insist that a certain report or copy of a report is still needed, but the recipients may not agree. A means for reviewing these situations is needed.

3. In short, we agree with the need for the originator of a computer report to periodically review the usefulness of the report either to himself or to those to whom he distributes it. The suggestion for OJCS to produce a semi annual listing of reports is an over simplification of the problem. We should also encourage anyone who receives an unneeded report to feed this fact back immediately to the originator so that future distribution of the report can be stopped, at least to this recipient. We should not limit our review of "unneeded reports" to those that are produced on computers. There are unneeded reports that are produced by expensive printing and reproduction equipment that are equally wasteful of paper.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Executive Officer to DD/M&S

SUBJECT : MSAG Proposals

1. Used Book Sale: This is not a new idea and has been raised several times in the past. The most recent suggestion that a book sale be conducted came from [REDACTED]. You will see from the attached correspondence that we supported the idea, and [REDACTED] actually has had several conversations with [REDACTED]. When time became available to actually do additional staff work, we had planned to submit the idea to the DD/M&S for approval and plan still to do so, perhaps in mid-summer.

2. Publicizing Promotions and QSI's: The Personnel Sub-Group has for some time forwarded promotion lists for those promoted to GS-08 and above to each office and/or division in the Agency. We have not publicized the QSI's, but have no objection to doing so. We have not run into any instance when an employee did not want his promotion publicized. We believe that it is appropriate for each sub-group to notify its members about promotions. I am not sure whether this recommendation suggests that it be done at the Directorate level, and again, if so, no objection.
